1. Hidden out of view for a sleeker look

Although everyone loves the functionality that comes with modern technology, devices can look out of place in certain interiors. For example, do you hate the fact that your TV dominates your otherwise seamless living area? You're not alone. This is why you can now transform the TV into a beautiful art piece that matches the color scheme of your space. The same goes for your speakers, which now come in the shape of wall-mounted touch screens that can display stunning images.

Homeowners also tend to favor integrated kitchen appliances, which blend in with their cabinetry and create a more streamlined appearance. Thanks to the unparalleled popularity of open plan living, kitchens have to mesh well with the rest of the space. This means that their functional features need to go into hiding. Modern kitchen appliances are built-in and kept out of sight when not in use. For example, your cooktop can be hidden with a sliding cover, your refrigerator can be covered with panels, and you can purchase an inconspicuous under-cabinet range hood.

2. Multipurpose units for versatile application

Since people have been spending more time than ever at home for the last year, their expectations of home comforts have grown dramatically. Never before has it been this important to have everything you need at your fingertips. This may be part of the reason why multipurpose appliances are more popular than they've ever been. They merge the functional features of several units but take up significantly less space.

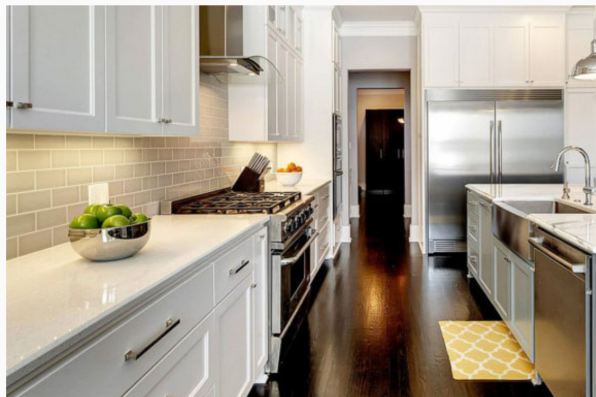

For example, multi cookers, which can fry, boil, steam, bake, and grill food, have become a staple for people who like their all-in-1 practicality. Next, innovative blenders combine the features of a standard blender, food processor, and mixer. Also, cutting-edge light bulbs can double as chargers for your phone or tablet. And steam cleaners can now replace your mop and vacuum.

3. Smart technology at your service

Your tech isn't getting only more and more beautiful, it's also becoming smarter by the minute. These novel, handy features give you added convenience and more control, not to mention how cool it feels to use them.

When it comes to improvements in the kitchen, the latest generation of refrigerators come with built-in touch screens that you can use to watch recipe videos or play music while you're cooking. You can also adjust the settings and timer on your oven remotely using your phone. In the bathroom, your toilet can have self-cleaning features and seat warmers. Your faucet can be equipped with automated temperature regulation and operate using sensors. And smart washers and dryers can send notifications to your phone when the cycle is done.

4. Health and safety come first

Since the beginning of the COVID-19 pandemic, people have understandably been hypervigilant when it comes to protecting their health. There's nothing more important these days than eliminating the harmful presence of germs and allergens from the home. To ensure your and your family's complete safety, the leading manufacturers of home goods have perfected their latest models to include practical extra features.

The latest washing machine models use technology that reduces moisture build-up, thereby preventing the growth of mildew and germs. Many also offer a hypoallergenic and sanitizing cycle to bring you the ultimate level of hygiene. Some refrigerators now maintain a steady level of humidity and have fine-tuned temperature control to ensure that your ingredients are fresh for longer. New designs by certain brands even possess a natural light simulator that helps produce stay fresh.
