

8 Biggest Color Trends for Fall/Winter 2021/2

As the season that comes after the hustle and bustle of summer, fall is the time when people naturally slow down and take a moment to relax and reconnect with the world around them. Seeing the stark colors of the preceding months give way to the earthy browns and subdued yellows, we're inspired to introduce some of that soothing mood into our homes.

Today, we'll look at 8 of the most appealing color trends for Fall and Winter of 2021 and 2022, and discuss how they can be used to bring warmth into your interior decor.

Elite Remodeling Business Update - October 2021

1. Greige

As its name implies, greige is a combination of beige and gray. Due to its incredibly neutral tone, it often also gets the monikers "cool beige" or "warm gray". Its elegant, yet casual appearance adds a calming quality to interior spaces and serves as the perfect base for colorful accessories.

2. Magenta purple

Where regular magenta is made up of equal parts blue and red, magenta purple has more blue than red, which gives it its unique purplish red shade that bears a close resemblance to the color of a plum. Its fiery tonality that signals both fascination and mystery can be used on both large surfaces and as an accent color in minor accessories. For best effect, combine it with softer shades from the same range.

Want to bring out the creative

Choosing the colors for fall and winter is impossible without mentioning the many earth colors that have been popular in interior decor for some years now. The colors of sky, rocks, sand, soil, and plants are warm, timeless, and easy to combine with rustic, colonial, or Scandinavian styles. Brown warrants a special mention here, seeing as it has remained relevant ever since the 90s and shows no signs of slowing down.

Want to bring out the creative energies and stimulate movement and communication? This beaming autumn orange brings both warmth and clarity to interior environments, and is an absolutely ideal match for gray, white, and sand tones. Use it with black to obtain a truly eye-catching, sophisticated look.

5. Olive & sage

Green has been the go-to color in interior design since 2017, and it definitely won't be going away anytime soon. Last season saw the rise of bottle green, which now seems to be giving way to the new, brighter shades of olive and sage. Sage combines grey and light green, so it goes really well with the greys, whites, and powder pinks that are common in modern interiors.

In comparison, olive is a more classical option. Its warmer tone makes it look really good next to gold and wood surfaces. With this in mind, it becomes clear why olive and sage are such a popular choice in 2021. Between the two of them, most people will be able to find the right shade that adds the required amount of warmth to their living space.

About Us

6. Terracotta

This intense color seamlessly merges the warm tones of brown, orange, and brick red. It has gained prominence in the interior design circles due to its ability to strike a great contrast to the coolness and minimalism of the ever-popular Scandinavian decor.

Although it may not seem that way, terracotta is an excellent match for most interior colors and blends perfectly with almost any style. It's an excellent addition to retro, ethno, boho, and industrial designs, and can even be used to make a minimalist decor feel more cozy.

7. Peach nougat

With its slight salmon shade and warm powdery tones, peach nougat stimulates confidence, action, and energy. It goes hand in hand with other hues from the same range, such as mauve or pink, and provides an excellent contrast to blue, gray, or green. Be careful, however: despite its apparent softness, peach nougat can become overwhelming when used in larger doses.

8. Samba

This voluptuous, sensual red is an obvious choice if you wish to add vigor and optimism to your space. Just keep in mind that, like most other reds, samba can create a sense of aggressiveness when used in big doses. To keep its fiery energy in check, make sure to use it in bright and spacious areas.
