

5 Ways to Add a Touch of Spring to Your Cooking Space

The kitchen is one of the most important rooms in any home. It's where we prepare our food, share our meals, and enjoy morning coffees with our loved ones. The challenges of these past two years have also inspired Americans to use their kitchens for other activities, such as studying or working.

With our cooking areas serving such a key role in our daily lives, it really pays to make sure they have a bright, fresh look that relaxes us and brings a sense of excitement to every new day. And what better way to do that than to create a lovely spring kitchen design?

Since the average kitchen remodel can take some months to complete, beginning your preparations a couple months in advance is recommended to ensure your new kitchen is ready as the new season comes along. Today, we'll help you do just that by discussing 5 ways your next kitchen remodeling project can make your cooking space feel like spring. Read on!

Elite Remodeling Business Update - February 2022

1. Bring in natural light

Spring is the season when the sun finally breaks through the heavy winter overcast and brings some much needed brightness into our homes. So why not take advantage of this by enlarging your kitchen windows to let in as much light as possible? Another option is to create an open kitchen plan, so that all that cozy natural light can spill in from your living room right into your cooking area.

If your kitchen leads to your backyard, consider replacing the door with a large

If your kitchen leads to your backyard, consider replacing the door with a large glass sliding door. This will not only serve as another way for light to get inside, but also allow you to keep an eye on what your kids and pets are doing in the backyard while you're busy cooking.

2. Update or reface the cabinets

Cabinets are one of the most important parts of any cooking space, both aesthetically and functionally. Since you're bringing in more light into your kitchen, choosing a bright, lustrous color for your cabinets will cause them to catch this additional light and "bounce" it around your kitchen. This will give the entire space a lovely brilliance during sunny days, and still make it feel bright and cheerful during cloudy ones.

3. Upgrade your sink

Not every remodeling project needs to be a major one. A great way to add that bit of spring change into your cooking space is to replace your old sink and accessories with a modern, versatile alternative. Consider adding a spray nozzle, updating the handles and knobs, or even going for a double or triple bowl design. In terms of materials, the options are truly limitless. Copper, cast iron, stainless steel, natural stone, and fireclay are all practical, eye-catching materials that will fit right in with a spring design.

4. Repaint

Repainting the kitchen walls is another simple renovation project that can have immediate and dramatic results. Darker hues can give the space a modern and intimate atmosphere, while light colors are a great choice for smaller kitchens because they make everything look more spacious and welcoming. If you're not sure which color to choose, remember that white is always in vogue and goes great with just about anything.

5. Open shelving

On top of giving your kitchen a more modern look and making smaller kitchens look larger, open shelving also provides endless opportunities to add various decorations such as flowerpots, potted plants, and other elements that traditionally go hand in hand with the season of growth. Open shelving also makes it easier for you to find what you need without having to sift through multiple drawers and cabinets.
